

Cyber Security Affects Every Kentuckian

This is Jane. She was born and raised in Kentucky. She is a single mom who went back to school after losing her job at the local factory and became a nurse.

Here is a sample of the private information government has collected from Jane and her kids:

- When they were born, birth certificates were generated. When they went to public school, Social Security numbers, dates of birth and sensitive health information were collected.
- When she turned 16, she got her driver's license. She gave her Social Security number and date of birth.
- When she lost her job, she enrolled her children in Medicaid, which collected their Social Security numbers, bank statements and life insurance policies. She had a health scare while pregnant and lab tests were conducted. The state collected those private health records.
- When she went back to school to get her nursing degree, the university collected her Social Security number, date of birth and other sensitive information.
- When she applied for a job at the university's medical center, she again gave her Social Security number, date of birth, driver's license number, cell phone number and bank account information.
- Before she could start her job, she had to be tested for TB and other diseases. Government has those results. And, she had to become certified, providing the state Board of Nursing with her Social Security number and other information.
- She pays state income taxes each year and gives out her Social Security number and bank account information for direct deposit.
- Every summer, she takes her kids to one of the state's resort parks. She gives out her credit card number to book a cabin.

This is Joe. He is a retired police officer and small business owner and who enjoys hunting and fishing.

Here is a sample of the private information government has collected from Joe:

- When he went through the police academy, he had to provide his Social Security number, date of birth and medical history and undergo a physical.
- When he got hired as a rookie cop, he had to give his blood type, undergo a credit check and provide his bank account number for direct deposit.
- When he got promoted, he had to submit a DNA swab.
- Upon retirement, he started a small business. When he pays his corporate taxes, he provides his business identification numbers, Social Security number and banking information.
- When he renews his hunting and fishing license each year, he gives his Social Security number, date of birth, height, weight, eye color and hair color. He pays with a credit card.
